Louis Metzner

v. (28208)

Martha Metzner (B.C.)

On December 14, 2000, the Supreme Court of Canada dismissed the application for leave to appeal in the above-mentioned case with costs on a solicitor-client basis. The respondent, a self represented lay litigant, filed her bill of costs and the applicant filed his objections, taking issue with the lack of evidence for the actual time spent by the respondent in preparing her response to the application for leave, and with the rate she claimed of $150 per hour. The applicant did not dispute the other items included in the bill of costs. The respondent remedied the lack of evidence by filing an affidavit as to the amount of time spent for her preparation (30 hours) and filed a revised bill of costs. The applicant did not question the affidavit.

The only outstanding issue is the appropriate rate to be applied for the time spent by the self represented lay respondent in the preparation of her response to the application for leave. Both parties referred to City Club Development (Middlegate) Corp. v. Cutts (1996), 26 B.C.L.R. (3d) 39 where Registrar Doolan reviewed the criteria applicable to the determination of special costs in favour of a self represented lay litigant. At paragraph 22, he concluded that the “reasonably competent solicitor approach [referred to in Bradshaw Construction Ltd. v. Bank of Nova Scotia (1991), 54 B.C.L.R. (2d) 309 (S.C.)] was unworkable when assessing special costs awarded to a lay litigant”, and that the only reasonable approach was “to make the award on a quantum meruit basis”.

In Fong v. Chang (1999), 46 O.R. (3d) 330, Sharpe J.A. examined the recovery of costs by self represented lawyers, and reviewed also the situation of self represented lay litigants. He concluded at paragraph 26 that “As the early Chancery rule recognized, a self represented lay litigant should receive only a “moderate” or “reasonable” allowance for the loss of time devoted to preparing and presenting the case”.

In view of the above-mentioned criteria and the fact that I agree with Registrar Doolan’s analysis that the award should be made on a quantum meruit basis, the particular circumstances of the case must be taken into account. It is relevant that the application for leave raised the novel issue of remanded cases, that the amounts at stake were substantial and that the litigation extended over a long period of time. Given these circumstances, I conclude that on a quantum meruit basis the hourly rate should be established at $100 an hour.

The bill of costs is therefore taxed accordingly.
